State Taxation.

We have received a ... from the Secretary of State, ... the Democratic party ... to pay its ... as ... to ... as objectionable ... gent ... order ... charges that the Democratic party ... pushing the ... and assuming ... "good old Democratic rule ... warn them ... will shut their ... calculate, with ... upon the calibre and caps they ... generally ... the ...

In private ... tone to the party sentiment, ... by board the bounty or tem... and as this ... may reasonably ... up out, we will take up the ... them and ... people, and invest ... light we ... like ... the proper way to ... State is by the draft ... when then State needs it ... to serve." However, the quota is being unfilled as yet, and a draft being something of which Democrats have a most especial horror, they have carefully reserved any ... truly Democratic theory ... two regiments shall be ... and equipped, when they intend to come down with both ... nation upon the conduct of the war generally and the financial policy of this State in particular and make all they possibly and logically can of their new theory when the next campaign occurs.

While they are carefully saving their ammunition we will discuss the bounty question in connection with this favorite idea of a draft. There is no doubt that when the Government needs troops it can order a draft, and there is also no doubt that the State has a right to grant bounties to favor enlistments as ... The first is notorious that the Government pays entirely insufficient on this coast. None of the bone and sinew of the country would enlist save from patriotic impulses, under which ... troops to defend our frontier, though it ... at our doors, that alone would be ... sufficient inducement to fill the ranks. Ashes of Roses

O will you come with me? Blow back to me
The withered leaves that drift down the Past!
Wafture on misty flight Summer sea
Its wasting sail, its fairy fleet of dreams 'mid cast!
Return! in the dim land of No More,
Oh, will you ever rest the rests of
Ye be with me, I watch, I pray some rare
I am, all better, than me I gather'd of spring!
Now, then, dear one, single, for the wave,
Ye fragrant, pink, pass again, perfumes bring.
Those tall, sea fleet—that laughing sea is dark—
And I only gather'd what was left by the lark.

O wild, wild waters, are the Summer airs
That kissed their scarlet lips long ago
That whispered sweet vows in blissful snares
To let them perish?—Yes, no roses blow
In the waste garden that at sweeping bare—
Where is my heart's bright rose, where, oh where?

Hist! thou no answer, thou implying gale!
Yet gentle, whisper'd, Past to me—
Nor snatches of sweet song in loving tale,
No tender murmur of our that Summer sea?
Are all my dreams wrecked in the Nevermore?
Vain is thy taunt, Destroyer. Spring once more
Thy cruel and ruthless rule shall restore!

FRANCES FULLER VICTOR

A New Anecdote of Washington

It was well known that Col. Seth Warner, of Revolutionary memory, who, with his noted regiment of Green Mountain Boys, as rear guard to St Clair's retreating army, after the evacuation of Ticonderoga, beat a whole brigade of the Hessian pursuing British in the battle of Hubbardton, and thus saved, probably, that luckless General's entire force, hurrying on just in front, from rout or capture—who came down like a thunderbolt on the flushed foe in mid battle at Bennington, and secured the victory for the wavering and half beaten Stark, and who finally was everywhere known as one of the best looking, most heroic, and accomplished military officers of the Continental army—Col Warner was an especial favorite of Gen. Washington.

This preliminary, however, is here introduced less on account of any particular pertinency most of it may have to the subject than for the purpose of explanation, and securing a readier appreciation and credence of the interesting personal anecdote which is about to be related, and which, it is confidently believed, has never before appeared in print.

One son of Col Warner still survives, or was surviving a few years ago, an unpretending resident of Lower Canada, from which—though then seventy five years old, but very active, and in full possession of all his strong native faculties—he came to the Capital of Vermont with the object of petitioning the Legislature for compensation for some lands formerly granted to the heirs of Col Warner, but unwittingly trenched upon by subsequent grants, and it was there and then that the writer of this reminiscence was introduced to him, and held several very interesting conversations.

In one of these conversations, while speaking of the private affairs of his father, Col Warner, he frankly said that the Colonel was very thoughtless about pecuniary matters,—that he not only expended in the cause of the country, or aiding the needy families of his soldiers, all his available property, but contracted many debts, which finally compelled him, a short time before his death, to place a mortgage on his homestead, amounting at last to over nine hundred dollars, and causing the family a great deal of depression and uneasiness. But of this depressing load they were at length suddenly relieved in the occurrence of a most unexpected incident, and one which formed, as well it might, quite an era in their family history. But we will let Mr Warner, whose Christian name we believe, was that of his father, Seth, relate the memorable incident in question in his own language, which, by the aid of the minutes before us, we know we can repeat substantially, and we think very nearly literally, as he made use of it.

"It was," he said, "in the month of September, 1789, the fall that Gen Washington made his tour through the Eastern States. We had kept ourselves tolerably well posted about the progress of his tour, and heard that he was to be in New Haven or Hartford, Conn., somewhere near the time at which the event I am going to relate to you took place. But as either of those places was quite a number of miles from Woodbury, where we lived, we had no more idea of seeing him than the man in the moon. My elder brother, Israel Putnam Warner, then a man grown, and myself a lad of twelve or thirteen, were both living with my mother at that time. And at the particular time of the day I refer to, Israel was in the yard grooming father's old war horse, which he had been compelled to go with father through all his campaigns to take charge of, for the fiery and proud old fellow would never let any body but his master, the Colonel, and his son Israel, mount or come near him, though he had now got so much tamed down by old age that he would behave quite decently with me or anybody. I was in the house with my mother, who happened to be unusually downcast that day, and was brooding over our family embarrassments, and had just been saying:

"No, no, Seth, I can never pay, nor, with our means, hardly begin to pay, this dreadful mortgage. And as I fear it is about to be foreclosed, we must no soon be driven from our pleasant home, where we have lived so long, and until your father's death, so happily. My husband, the Colonel, fought as well as the bravest of them, and did all he could and more than his part, for the good of the cause, they all are willing to allow, and I know very well that he wore himself out in the service, and was thus brought to a premature grave. And yet here is his family almost on the verge of beggary."

"Tears here started to mother's eyes, which so touched me that I rose, and went and looked out of the window, when, to my surprise, I saw entering the yard two well mounted stranger gentlemen, whom, from something about their general appearance, I took to be old military officers of pretty high rank—or, at least, one of them, who was large and had a very commanding look. Having significantly beckoned mother to my side, she eagerly gazed out at the new comers a moment in silence, when she suddenly gave a start, and, with an excited air exclaimed:

"'Seth! just take notice of that noble looking one! Why, he looks ever so much like the picture I once saw of——. But no, that surely can't be!'

"'Well, at any rate mother, he must be a man of some consequence for see! brother Israel, who lets it be known him, is swinging his hat from his head clear away at arm's length and bowing lower than he would to a king! Israel is quite too stiff necked to do that for any common man. But they are beginning to talk. I will just open the door here a little mite, and perhaps we can hear what they are saying.'

"I did so, and the first words I distinguished were those of the person who had so attracted our attention, and who, addressing my brother, and pointing to the horse by the side of which he was standing, asked,

"'Is not that the horse Col Warner used to ride in the war?'

"'It is, your Excellency,' replied my brother Israel, again bowing low and very respectfully.

"'Ah yes! I thought so,' resumed the former, turning to his companion or aid, and pointing to the old war steed with that interest with which he was known ever to regard fine horses. 'I thought I could be no other. Just glance at his long, graceful limbs—shapely head and neck, broad chest, haunches, and limbs. I have seen Col Warner riding him on a parade when I noted him a rare animal, and thought that the horse and rider, taken together—for Warner was a model of a figure and several inches taller than I am—made a military appearance second to none in the Continental army. But my business is with your mother, my young friend, and I will now if you will take charge of my horse a few minutes, go in at once to see her.'

"Hearing this announcement, mother and I hastily retreated to our former seats, and, with the curiosity and excitement of what we had witnessed naturally raised in us, silently awaited the entry of the expected visitors. We had been thus seated but two or three minutes, before he came in, and bowing graciously to my mother said:

"'I take this to be Mrs Warner the widow of my much esteemed friend, the late Col Warner, of the Continental army.'

"'It is sir,' she replied tremulously.

"'Will you permit me to introduce myself to you, madam?' he resumed, with that winning sort of dignity I had noticed in him from the first, 'I am Gen. Washington. And after I arrived in this section of the country, a few days ago, I made—and I hope you will pardon me the liberty I took with your private affairs—I made some inquiries about you and the situation of your family, when learning, to my deep regret that your late husband, in consequence of his long continued absence from his home and business, while in the service of his country, and his subsequent shattered health, resulting from the hardships of war left you laboring under pecuniary embarrassments, I was prompted to come and see you.'

"'I had little dreamed of such an honor and such a kindness, General,' she responded, nearly overpowerd by her emotions and the imposing presence of her august visitor.

"'There is a mortgage,' he rejoined, with out responding in any way to her last remark, 'a rather heavy mortgage on your homestead.'

"'I am sorry, she replied, sadly, very sorry, that I am compelled to say there is, Gen Washington—a much heavier one than I can ever pay.'

"'So I had ascertained,' the General proceeded, 'and I have also, before coming here, been at the pains of ascertaining the exact amount now due, and required to cancel this, to you, doubtless, ruinous incumbrance, and I propose now to leave with you the sum of money you will need for effecting that desirable object.'

"'Does the money come from Government, sir?' she asked, doubtfully and with a look that seemed to say, 'If it does, then all is right.'

"Washington looked at her, and hesitated a little at first, but soon, while taking up the valise he had brought in with him, slowly responded,

"'In one sense it does, I may say, madam if you have delicacies on the subject. I am in receipt of a liberal yearly salary from Government, from which it is discretionary with me to impart aid sometimes to deserving objects; and I certainly know of none more so than one which will relieve the family of so meritorious an officer as your late self sacrificing husband.'

"Without waiting for any rejoinder to these remarks, he opened his valise, and took from it a bag of silver money, and deliberately proceeded to draw out and count from it, till he had reached the sum of nine hundred and some odd dollars, which afterward proved to be precisely the sum demanded in principal, interest, and fees, for the discharge of the mortgage on our place. He then, after returning the money to the bag and setting it aside for the purpose he had designated, and taking the hand of my mother who seemed inclined to remonstrate, but could not force the words for it from her quivering lips, tenderly, but with an air that seemed to forbid any attempt at refusal, said to her:

"'Accept it, don't hesitate to accept it—take it and get the mortgage discharged at once, and then all your immediately pressing anxieties will be relieved, and soon you will find those brighter days the God of the widow has kept in store for you. And now, as my time is quite limited, it only remains for me to say, as I do most sincerely and kindly, heaven bless you, dear madam, heaven bless you, Farewell!'

"I was present during the whole of this interview between Gen Washington and my mother, heard every word they both said, and saw all the money counted down on the table, and feel very confident that I have neither taken from nor added to anything that there took place.

"On leaving the house, Gen. Washington immediately mounted his horse and rode away, leaving us quite unable for a while to realize this unexpected visit, and the still more unexpected benefaction of the illustrious visitor."

As Mr. Warner was ascertained to have been a man of integrity and of an unbroken memory, there need be but little doubt respecting the truth and authenticity of the above related incident, which, while it involves testimony highly honorable to the heroic leader of the Green Mountain Boys, furnishes a new and beautiful illustration of the elevated and benevolent character of Washington.

ILL LUCK DEFIED.—A society has lately been formed in Bordeaux, France to put down the superstitions of evil omens. As everybody knows, it is accounted bad luck to begin anything on Friday, or to sit at table with thirteen, or to balance a chair on one leg, or to spill salt between yourself and friend. The new society have regular dinners on Fridays have thirteen guests, turn chairs on one leg and spill salt around before commencing. In the whole year during which bad luck had been thus defied, no single fatality has, as yet, occurred to any member.

THE OLDEST STEAMER AFLOAT.—Probably the oldest steamer afloat is the Industry, belonging on the river Clyde, Scotland. Some time since one of the partners of the Glasgow and Greenock Towing Company married and on that occasion all the boats in the harbor were gaily dressed. The steamer Industry, which has now entered the fifteenth year of her age carried the flag of the Commodore, being the oldest vessel afloat. The Industry was built in 1814 and was the third steamer built on the river Clyde.

EMBRACING THE OLD FLAG.—In the rebel House of Representatives on motion of Mr Chilton (Ala.) to proceed to consider the resolution concerning the disloyalty of Hon. Williamson R. W. Cobb one of the witnesses against Mr Cobb deposed that when the Yankee troops passed up the Chattanooga river, just before the Chattanooga battle, Mr. Cobb came to his door and said he wanted to see the United States flag once more unfurled to the breeze. He took the flag and embraced and kissed it.

DRY GOODS.—The Manchester Print Works have made during the year fourteen millions five hundred of delaines and print cloths, and fifty six thousand dozen of hosiery equal to seven thousand nine hundred fifty four miles of cloth, or twenty miles daily.
